

Sara Padilla is the Project Manager and Co-Principal Investigator for the Farmers Market Metrics “Indicators for Impact: Farmers Markets as Leaders in Collaborative Food System Data Collection and Analysis” project for the Farmers Market Coalition. In this capacity Sara oversees administrative operations for this three-year regional project examining the impact of farmers markets within their communities. She shares responsibility for achieving the technical success of the project, while also complying with the financial and administrative policies and regulations associated with the award.

Sara has over 15 years’ experience in portfolio management, healthy food systems promotion and education, social marketing/behavior change and human services delivery in the United States and internationally. She has provided expertise in leading program and policy development for obesity prevention and chronic and infectious disease prevention programs, and oversaw the Communities Putting Prevention to Work (CPPW) initiative at the Community Food Security Coalition. She coordinated the delivery of technical assistance focused on farmers markets, farm to school programs, food policy councils, and healthy retail to communities located across the nation. Sara served as a U.S. Peace Corps Volunteer in the Dominican Republic and has also worked in Bolivia, Guatemala, Honduras, and Mexico. She is fluent in Spanish.

Sara earned a Bachelor of Arts in Anthropology at the College of William and Mary. She also holds a Master’s degree in Public Health from Tulane University. She lives with her family in Portland, Oregon.
