

Stacy Miller serves as an Independent Advisor to the Farmers Market Metrics program, providing guidance on project design and implementation.

Stacy has, at various times, been a vendor, manager, and researcher, as well as a perennial consumer. She served as the manager of the Morgantown Farmers Market for two years while she earned a Masters of Science in Agricultural and Environmental Education from West Virginia University. She has since co-authored journal articles, and a number of research reports on farmers market impacts, policies, and characteristics. Stacy served as Executive Director of the Farmers Market Coalition from January 2009 to August 2012, and is presently leading FMC's involvement with The Real Deal project and consults with the Farmers Market Metrics Project Team. Stacy enjoys working with managers, farmers, economic developers, and others in the farmers market sphere to cultivate an environment of sharing, and believes farmers markets have the power to sustain healthy farms, healthy communities, and healthy economies. When not working for FMC, Stacy can be found pulling weeds, harvesting greens, riding her bicycle, and playing with her son Fionn.
